

Survey Results

Based on the current environment do you expect to shift your private credit focus?

The latest Eye on Private Credit survey results reveal an encouraging outlook for private credit in 2022. The largest number of respondents, 70%, plan to maintain their current approach to private credit. The other 30% are split equally either reorienting further out on the risk spectrum or looking to reduce risk.

The broad range of different private credit investment options across the risk/return spectrum could provide investors an opportunity to customize their portfolios with different orientations, preferences, and approaches designed to meet their individual objectives.

As noted by Private Debt Investor, many investors in 2021 were focused on a senior debt investment strategy driven by a demand for relatively safer assets due to uncertainty in the economy, including covid-related restrictions on business, inflation, and fears that some assets are overvalued.
