

Survey Results

When do you expect to start taking in-person meetings with managers?

Will you keep your mask on at all times?

Will you/your employer require proof of vaccination?

To meet in person or not to meet in person? A question on so many of our minds. We believe people want to get back to normal but do it in a safe way, so we asked our readers when they expect in-person manager meetings to resume and if masks will stay on during the duration of the meeting as well as if proof of vaccination will be required.

Eye on Private Credit survey results reveal that most respondents expect to take in-person manager meetings in Q3 or Q4 of 2021. So what will these in-person meetings look like? Seventy-six percent of respondents said they will not wear a mask during meetings. The matter of vaccination requirement is quite complicated with many firms still considering their approach as evidenced by 69% of respondents indicating they are not sure if they/their employer will require proof of vaccination.
